BEFORE THE PUBLIC DISCLOSURE COMMISSION OF THE STATE OF WASHINGTON

IN RE COMPLIANCE
WITH RCW 42.17

JEFFERSON COUNTY REPUBLICAN
CENTRAL COMMITTEE

Respondent

PDC CASE NO: 04-288

Report of Investigation

I.

BACKGROUND

- 1.1 On July 21, 2003, Mark Rose filed a Candidate Registration, Public Disclosure Commission (PDC) form C-1 declaring his candidacy for Jefferson County Commissioner in the 2003 general election. Mr. Rose was defeated by 1,603 votes by Pat Rodgers.
- 1.2 William Biery filed a complaint with the PDC on October 17, 2003, alleging that the Jefferson County Republican Central Committee (JCRC) sponsored television ads opposing Jefferson County Commissioner candidate Mark Rose that contained false information.

II.

SCOPE

- 2.1 Staff reviewed William Biery's complaint to the PDC received October 17, 2003.

- 2.2 Staff reviewed written responses to the complaint from Ronald Gregory, Chair of the JCRCC received November 3, 2003 and January 20, 2004.
- 2.3 Staff interviewed JCRCC Chair Ronald Gregory under oath on January 6th and January 28, 2004. A third telephone interview, not under oath, was conducted with Mr. Gregory on February 10, 2004.
- 2.4 Staff interviewed Mark Rose via telephone on December 5, 2003.
- 2.5 Staff interviewed Darcy Rochelle, Political Specialist at Comcast Ad Sales via telephone on November 20, 2003.
- 2.6 Staff interviewed William Biery via telephone on December 1, 2003.
- 2.7 Staff interviewed Port Townsend Leader Publisher, Scott Wilson via telephone on December 4, 2003.
- 2.8 Staff interviewed Los Angeles Times personnel staff, Sarah Streiff, via telephone on December 11, 2003 and March 2, 2004. In addition, staff reviewed a facsimile received from Ms. Streiff on March 2, 2004.
- 2.9 Staff interviewed Leola Armstrong under oath on March 3, 2004.
- 2.10 Staff interviewed Bryn Armstrong under oath on March 3, 2004.
- 2.11 Staff reviewed an email dated January 6, 2004, from Rick Sullivan, co-partner of eurocycle.com and freelance media designer and producer.
- 2.12 Staff viewed the political advertisement opposing Mark Rose and referred to in the complaint. Staff transcribed the advertisement for use as an exhibit.
- 2.13 Staff reviewed correspondence, copies of Los Angeles Times articles written by Mark Rose and a portion of an August 27, 2003 Port Townsend Leader newspaper article about Mr. Rose submitted by Mr. Rose's campaign manager, Susan Marett.
- 2.14 Staff reviewed Port Townsend Leader and Peninsula Daily News letters to the editor and articles about Mark Rose.

III.

RELEVANT AREAS OF LAW

3.1 RCW 42.17.530 states in part:

(1) It is a violation of this chapter for a person to sponsor with actual malice:

(a) Political advertising that contains a false statement of material fact about a candidate for public office.

(2) Any violation of this section shall be proven by clear and convincing evidence.

3.2 RCW 42.17.505 states the following:

(1) "Actual malice" means to act with knowledge of falsity or with reckless disregard as to truth or falsity."

IV.

FINDINGS

4.1 On July 21, 2003, Mark Rose filed a Candidate Registration, Public Disclosure Commission (PDC) form C-1 declaring his candidacy for Jefferson County Commissioner in the 2003 general election. Mr. Rose was defeated in the general election.

4.2 The Elect Mark Rose campaign distributed a "slim jim" campaign piece that listed Mr. Rose's community record and background. (Exhibit #1) Mr. Rose's background was described as:

- Extended family ties to South Jefferson County
- Twenty years business background; journalist with the New York Times and LA Times
- Seven years Hotshot & Helitac forest firefighting, US Forest Service, Washington

4.3 Mr. Rose's background became an important issue in the campaign. Accusations were made about his honesty regarding his employment history, his education and his financial success. In response to the controversy over Mr. Rose's honesty, two Jefferson County newspapers printed articles about the issues. One of the issues raised was Mr. Rose's campaign literature in which he describes himself as a "journalist with the New York Times and L.A. Times." Republicans questioned whether Rose could claim to be a journalist. The Jefferson County Republican Central Committee sponsored 400 television advertisements that claimed Mr. Rose lied about his education, employment and business success resulting in a complaint filed by William Biery alleging false advertising against Mr. Rose.

Television Advertisements

- 4.4 According to Darcy Rochelle, Political Specialist at Comcast Ad Sales, a political advertisement opposing Jefferson County Commissioner candidate Mark Rose ran 400 times on eight local cable channels between October 16 and November 3, 2003. Ms. Rochelle provided a copy of the advertisement schedule to PDC staff. (Exhibit #2) On October 27, 2003, the JCRCC submitted Schedule A to C4 disclosing a $2,000 expenditure on October 9, 2003, to Millennium Digital Media for TV advertisement time. (Exhibit #3)
- 4.5 The political advertisement that ran on cable channels in Jefferson County made three statements about Mark Rose, County Commissioner candidate. The ad showed a still photo of Mr. Rose holding a microphone. During each statement read, Mr. Rose's nose stretches longer. One of the statements alleged, "Mark Rose claimed to be a staff member of the LA Times when all he did was write a letter to the editor." The ad went on to state, "Consider the real facts before you vote. Mark Rose is bad news for Jefferson County. Paid for by Jefferson County Republican Central Committee." (Exhibit #4)
- 4.6 William Biery filed a complaint with the PDC on October 17, 2003, alleging that the JCRCC sponsored television ads containing false information that opposed Jefferson County Commissioner candidate Mark Rose. (Exhibit #5) Mr. Biery's complaint stated that the Jefferson County Republicans should have known the statement in the ad was false because there had been several letters and articles in local newspapers verifying Mr. Rose's employment. His complaint stated in part:

"A front page article in the Port Townsend Leader (Dot.com disagreement haunts Rose) of August 27, 2003, states 'Rose provided the Leader a clip file of about two years of writing during the 1980s and 1990s. Rose was a freelance contributor for the New York Times and an editorial staff employee at the Los Angeles Times. In addition, he wrote a column for the New York Press, a free weekly publication.' The Leader editorial staff and reporters were satisfied with these facts and they have never been disproved.

It seems to me that the Republicans' ad is a false statement of material fact that the Republicans had plenty of time to know about before running their ad which is broadcast several times each day on PTTV (Port Townsend) and freely distributed via the website <http://eurocycle.com/demo/Pinocchio.mpg>."

- 4.7 Staff interviewed Mark Rose via telephone on December 5, 2003. Mr. Rose stated that he was employed as an editorial writer for the Los Angeles Times in 1982. As a beginning writer, he wrote obituaries and short book reviews. As he became more experienced, he wrote articles including an eight-page feature story.

Mr. Rose stated that when he heard in August that his employment history was being questioned, he went to the Port Townsend Leader and the Peninsula Daily News and showed reporters clippings of his work for the Los Angeles Times. The result was a front page article in The Leader describing Mr. Rose's clips. Mr. Rose stated to staff that the JCRCC should have known that the statement in their ad was untrue because information regarding his employment with the Los Angeles Times was readily available to the public through numerous sources prior to the advertisement running on local television. Mr. Rose's campaign manager, Susan Marett, provided PDC staff with copies of three articles identifying the author, Mark Rose, as a Times editorial staff member. (Exhibit #6) Ms. Marett stated to staff that she obtained the clips from Mr. Rose and no one from the JCRCC contacted her to verify Mr. Rose's employment.

- 4.8 Following is a chronology of events relating to the complaint:

- August 27, 2003 Port Townsend Leader newspaper article by Barney Burke (Exhibit #7)

"Rose provided The Leader a clip file of about two years of writing during the 1980s and 1990s. Rose was a freelance contributor for the New York Times and an editorial staff employee at the Los Angeles Times. In addition, he wrote a column for the New York Press, a free weekly publication."

- September 3, 2003 Bryn Armstrong's letter to the Editor in PT Leader (Exhibit #8)

"I expect a responsible media to look closely at all candidates for major, high-paying offices. I know what I'm talking about. You see I spent more than 40 years in the media business and was the executive editor of the Las Vegas Sun.

So Mr. Rose was a journalist for the L.A. Times and the New York Times? Let's see some of his 'work' and verify his employment."

Editor's note printed at the end of the letter:

"Editor's note: Mr. Rose's business experience in California was detailed in the Aug. 27 Leader...In terms of his experience as a journalist, we have confirmed that Mr. Rose was on the staff of the Los Angeles Times and was a free-lance writer for the New York Times. He was on the staff of at least one other media outlet in New York City."

- September 12, 2003 Peninsula Daily News article: Mark Rose answers allegations in letters (Exhibit #9)

"Concerning letters in Thursday's PDN questioning my background and the history of my in-laws:--I would be glad to show my portfolio of journalism for The New York Times, Los Angeles Times, Village Voice and New York Press to any legitimate source."

Editor's Note at end: "Peninsula Daily News has confirmed that Rose was on the staff at the Los Angeles Times and wrote free-lance articles that were published by The New York Times."

- October 9, 2003 JCRCC paid Millennium Digital Media $2,000 for TV Advertisements
- October 16th through October 26, 2003 TV Advertisements ran: 288 times on CNN, ESPN, FSNW, HGTV, LIF, TBS, TNT, USA between 5 PM and Midnight (Cost $1440)
- October 17, 2003 Letter from Noel Greenwood, former Los Angeles Times editor, to Bryn Armstrong, stating he had no recollection of Mark Rose being employed at the LA Times, but a search of employee personnel records had not yet been completed. (Exhibit #10)

- October 22, 2003 PT Leader article by Barney Burke and Patrick J. Sullivan (Exhibit #11)

"L.A. Times records

The Republican TV ad stated that Rose was not an L.A. Times employee and that he only wrote a 'letter to the editor.'

According to an official with the L.A. Times Personnel Department, Mark Rose was an employee of that company from April 26, 1982 to Dec. 6, 1982. The company's personnel files go back only seven years, so no further details of Rose's employment were available. But the spokesperson confirmed that Rose indeed is listed as a former employee.

'I can confirm the 1982 date,' the spokesperson said Monday afternoon.

In August, Rose had submitted for Leader review a file of newspaper clips, some original and some photocopies, that included about six pieces from the L.A. Times. This included an obituary, a travel piece and a book review published in 1982. Two of those items included an ending tagline reference that Rose was a Times 'editorial' employee. It also appears the L.A. Times published a travel piece by Rose on Oct. 24, 1982, regarding his experiences living in New York City.

In a piece of campaign literature, Rose describes himself as having been a 'journalist with the New York Times and L.A. Times.' Republicans have questioned whether Rose can call himself a journalist. His New York Times experience was that of a freelance writer; the New York Times clips Rose provided to the Leader were opinion or first-person accounts. He also had other articles published as a freelancer in other New York newspapers in 1983 and 1991, according to clips he provided the Leader.

In interviews with the Leader, Rose never claimed to have been an employee of the New York Times."

- October 31st through November 3, 2003 Additional TV Advertisements ran:

112 times on CNN, ESPN, FSNW, HGTV, LIF, TBS, TNT, USA
between 5 PM and Midnight (Cost $560)

- 4.9 PDC staff interviewed Ronald Gregory, Chair of the JCRCC, under oath by telephone on January 28, 2004, with a follow-up telephone interview on February 10, 2004. Mr. Gregory stated that because Mr. Rose's employment had been an issue in the campaign for some time, the JCRCC executive committee members searched for further information in an attempt to verify Mr. Rose's employment with the Los Angeles Times. Bryn Armstrong, former editor of the Las Vegas Sun and husband of the current JCRCC vice chair, Leola Armstrong, (Mr. Gregory stated that Ms. Armstrong was not in that position at the time the ad was run) was asked for help in verifying Mr. Rose's employment with the Los Angeles Times. Mr. Armstrong contacted Noel Greenwood, retired editor of the Los Angeles Times and asked him to "check around" to verify Mr. Rose's employment with the Los Angeles Times.

Mr. Gregory stated that Mr. Greenwood told Mr. Armstrong verbally prior to production of the television advertisement that he had no recollection of anyone named Mark Rose on the editorial staff of the Los Angeles Times during his tenure as an editor. Mr. Greenwood faxed a letter to Mr. Armstrong on October 17, 2003 stating his findings. Mr. Gregory stated to staff that the JCRCC executive committee used Mr. Greenwood's opinion as the basis for the statements used in the television ad. Mr. Gregory provided staff with a copy of Mr. Greenwood's letter. The letter stated in part:

"I have no recollection of anyone named Mark Rose on the editorial staff of the Los Angeles Times during my tenure as an editor, nor do several other editors with whom I have consulted. A search by the Times' library thus far has turned up no articles that indicate he was a member of the editorial staff...

A search of employee personnel records has not yet been completed. If Mr. Rose was employed in a lesser position, say as a copy messenger or clerk in an editorial office, that would entitle him to claim that he was an editorial department employee. But it would not entitle him to claim that he was a journalist at the Times or a member of the editorial staff. The distinction is quite important."

- 4.10 Staff pointed out to Mr. Gregory that Mr. Greenwood's letter stated that a search of employee personnel records had not yet been completed. Mr. Greenwood's letter was dated October 17, 2003, one day after the television ads began on October 16th. Mr. Gregory was asked if he made any attempt to verify with the Los Angeles Times as to Mr. Rose's employment history since Mr. Greenwood's statement was not conclusive. Mr. Gregory stated:

"No one to my knowledge from the Republican Party checked that out. The story, there was a story in the Leader so you could check with the newspaper. They did follow up and the paper responded that he was employed but they were not free to or would not, or could not give any information out as to his job description...there was no information as to just what he did specifically. If you were a copy boy or a janitor you have a record on file of your employment."

- 4.11 Mr. Gregory stated that the JCRCC executive committee based the statements in the television advertisement on information that they felt was accurate; that Mr. Rose was not on the editorial staff. Mr. Gregory stated:

"Our issue is not whether he was employed or not. Our issue was his role or his job and the claims that were made here early on in the campaign about him being a member of the LA Editorial Times Board.

- 4.12 Mr. Gregory could not explain why the ad stated, "...when all he did was write a letter to the editor." He stated:

"...at this point in time, all I can say is that the general tone of the ad we believe is correct...Well, I haven't received anything that shows that Mark Rose was an employee; our issue, was he a staff employee? Was he on the editorial board?"

- 4.13 Staff interviewed Leola Armstrong under oath via telephone on March 3, 2004. Ms. Armstrong stated to staff that she was aware of questions regarding Mark Rose's previous employment with the Los Angeles Times. Ms. Armstrong's husband, Bryn Armstrong, had previously worked with Noel Greenwood, former editor of the Los Angeles Times so he contacted Mr. Greenwood and asked him to check on Mr. Rose's employment. Ms. Armstrong stated to staff:

"We remembered Noel and so my husband called him and asked him if he knew Mark Rose and he made an extensive search and he found that Mark Rose was not on the journalism staff. And he said that they hadn't completely searched the employee personnel records but if he was in any lesser position, he wouldn't be entitled to claim he was an editorial department employee. So he may have been; he may have freelanced. And apparently they checked and they said he worked someplace at the LA Times for a few months. But he wasn't (according to Noel who would know); he was never on the editorial staff."

- 4.14 Mr. Greenwood's letter stated, "A search of employee personnel records has not yet been completed." Ms. Armstrong was asked if she received any additional information about Mr. Rose's employment since Mr.

Greenwood's letter showed that the search of Mr. Rose's employment was inconclusive and she stated, "No, personally, no."

- 4.15 PDC staff contacted the personnel department at the Los Angeles Times on December 11, 2003 and spoke with Sarah Streiff and asked her to verify Mark Rose's employment. Ms. Streiff faxed a written statement to staff verifying her findings of Mr. Rose's employment with the Los Angeles Times from April 26 through December 6, 1982. (Exhibit #12) Miss Streiff stated that she processes all personnel verification requests and she had one other request, which was from a newspaper reporter, for Mr. Rose's records.

Web Site

- 4.16 Mr. Biery's complaint also alleged that the advertisement was distributed via the website <http://eurocycle.com/demo/Pinocchio.mpg>. PDC staff was not able to verify that the advertisement was available to the public on a website as stated in the complaint. Mr. Gregory stated in his October 31, 2003 written response to the complaint that, "Mr. Biery apparently has a copy of a private e-mail sent to me by the production designer of our TV ad for review purposes. There is no Republican Party website with this information and there was never any attempt to share this url outside of our Executive Committee and a select few Republican Party members for review and comment purposes."
- 4.17 On January 6, 2004, staff received an email from Rick Sullivan, freelance media designer and producer and co-partner of eurocycle.com, the website where the email copy of the Mark Rose advertisement originated. (Exhibit #13) Mr. Sullivan stated the video of the television ad was available in a private directory that was not available to the public and was to be used only to preview the product by the customer.
- 4.18 Mark Rose told staff that he feels the impact of the television ads was extremely important and changed the outcome of the election. Mr. Rose stated, "The Jefferson County Republicans knew for months, from several sources, that their television ad was fallacious."

Respectfully Submitted this 14th day of June 2004

Opposing Mark Rose

Mark Rose tells newspapers he went to NYU when he admits he has a high school education.

Mark Rose claimed to be a staff member of the LA Times, when all he did was write a letter to the editor.

Mark Rose portrays himself as a success yet records show he owes back taxes in California and has few assets.

Is this the leadership we want for the highest office in Jefferson County?

Consider the real facts before you vote. Mark Rose is bad news for Jefferson County.

Subject: Formal complaint – Jefferson County Republican Central Committee (JCRCC)

Dear Mr. Stutzman,

The Jefferson County Republican Central Committee is running ads against Democratic candidate for County Commissioner Mark Rose which are false. The PDC's publication Political Advertising states: "The Law Forbids" ... sponsoring an ad that contains a false statement of material fact about a candidate. . ." The statement in the TV spot for the JCRCC states that Mark Rose "claims to have been a staff writer for the LA Times when all he did was write a letter to the editor."

A front page article in the Port Townsend Leader (Dot.com disagreement haunts Rose) of August 27, 2003, states "Rose provided the Leader a clip file of about two years of writing during the 1980s and 1990s. Rose was a freelance contributor for the New York Times and an editorial staff employee at the Los Angeles Times. In addition, he wrote a column for the New York Press, a free weekly publication." The Leader editorial staff and reporters were satisfied with these facts and they have never been disproved.

It seems to me that the Republicans' ad is a false statement of material fact that the Republicans had plenty of time to know about before running their ad which is broadcast several times each day on PTTV (Port Townsend) and freely distributed via the website. <http://eurocycle.com/demo/Pinocchio.mpg>

Due to the closeness of the November election, I request you investigate this matter promptly, attain compliance with the legal requirements and halt screening the illegal ads on television and on the internet website.

Sincerely,

William Biery

THE BOOK REVIEW

A human madness from a genius of genes

THE WHITE PLAGUE by Frank Herbert (Putnam's $14.95)

Frank Herbert's epic Dune series creates a resplendent, imaginative desert planet where ecological and philosophical concerns seem to parallel ours of the 60s and 70s.

In this, his first novel that can't be called science fiction ("speculative" perhaps), he remains firmly earthbound, sometime not far from the present, in a land that faces as many problems with as many conflicting solutions as his Arrakis millennium removed.

When John O'Neill, an American biologist visiting Ireland, sees his wife and two daughters blown up by a terrorist bomb, he undergoes an instant metamorphosis, from brilliant scientist to genius madman.

Vowing vengeance, he unleashes a unique plague that is carried by men, who are unaffected, but is 100% fatal to women and immune to antibodies.

The madman, as he is known, is soon successful in wiping out a better part of the female population in England, Libya and Ireland, the first three target areas. When world leaders refuse to quarantine those countries, the plague spreads unabated. Boston, Seattle, parts of New York and Washington are put to the "panic fire," to kill the infection. In some countries the ratio of men to women is reduced to 8,000 to 1. Nuke the Russians while they're weak, an important American businessman says. They're counseled to do the same to us. No one is to be trusted.

Technology, warfare, ideology, all are useless, because one man discovers a plague that knowledgeable scientists agree was inevitable, given advances in research of recombinant DNA.

It's an "exquisitely balanced set of genes," so innovative, intertwined, complex and subtle that trying to crack it is like "seeing a shadow on a shade and deducing the shape that must have projected that shadow."

Reviewed by Mark Rose

"We have been lifted to new heights," one venerated scientist gaggles, admiring O'Neill's handwork. "I am in awe of what I see."

With finely plotted strokes, Herbert takes what could have been a single-surprise doomsday thriller, elevates it, deepens it to a study of the unmonitored advances of science, the duplicity and greed of government, the innate complexity of human character and nationalistic terror. Survival of the planet is a problem that requires a mass consensus for a solution. Why do we see our own fenced-in plot of land, blind to the crumbling terrain that surrounds it?

Herbert takes us on a fascinating trip over that terrain: a trek through the plague-ravaged Irish countryside with a priest, a boy, a Provo terrorist (ironically, the same who blew up O'Neill's family), and the madman, himself, now in the schizophrenic persona of O'Donnell, a molecular biologist on his way to help save civilization. Or doom it.

All four, in their own ways, personify a degree of the historic shock and effect of Irish oppression and hatred. All are victims.

Father Michael and Henry the terrorist argue endlessly trying to fix blame for the plague and the plight of the Irish. See what your god has done, Henry says. See what godlessness has wrought, the priest counters. The boy, mute, a silent soul of suffering, withdraws further. The madman is confused. The priest, after months of futile pontification, puts it all in order: "I know we often say an intellectual argument is the darling of our desires," he explains to the madman. "But that's not true. We much prefer passions. We like to fan the burning in the gulls. We like to parade our agonies... the most intellectual pursuit of the Irish... is the pursuit of the sardonic."

And pursue it they do, all the way to the laboratory where O'Neill/O'Donnell, madman/savior, will find the antidote to his plague, or—still stricken from the death of his family—sabotage the project. Ah, but the priest was right. The Irish, "preferring to make epics out of disasters," must perpetuate centuries-old defeat and despair.

Science and common sense ultimately prevail over chaos but there are no conclusions to this story, no blame laid, only thoughtfully proposed questions.

This is engaging entertainment, intriguing, wholly believable and even important, a book of ideas put forth by fully fleshed characters in a common world in front of us today.

Herbert does a good job of demystifying and simplifying convoluted, highly technical scientific jargon. For every scientist going on about "a new field description, mass spectrometer technique... for the analysis of the products from the pyrolysis of DNA," there is a flushed politician demanding "Simply man, such talk got us into this, now I have to try to get us out."

Scientists, by nature, are incorrigibly curious, and curiosity can be deadly. What are the rules of the game?

Three quarters of the way through I figured out the puzzle, at least in this context. Frank Herbert is the madman, with just the imagination, scientific knowledge, insight of character and history to pull it off. Beware of Herbert. He will... egads... make you think.

Rose is a Times editorial staff member.

Barra: A Fine Piece of Old Mexico

By MARK ROSE

Mario, the torero (fighter of bulls), set my feet closer in, straightened my shoulders, extended my left arm and bent my right so the heavy cape would fall properly to the side.

"Look ahead. Don't be so stiff," he chastised.

He backed up, jutted his forefingers from the top of his head, snorted and kicked his feet in the sand. He was the bull.

After 20 minutes of intensive instruction, dry runs and philosophical bantering, I was finally ready to perform pase de la muerte, the death pass.

Taken by the moment, I clicked my heels together, fixed a mean glare and cocked my head back, forgetting in an instant all that he had taught.

"Vamonos, toro, aaaaaaa," I yelled.

Mario, the patient teacher, collapsed in the sand in a fit of laughter.

"You don't understand," he said when he recovered.

"You must be smarter than the bull, not like him. You have much to learn."

He was, of course, right on all counts. He proclaimed me a novillero (novice matador) nonetheless, gave me a couple more swigs from his tequila bottle and waved adios as I continued.

Mario, the torero, was just one of the many who were making it difficult for me to complete unimpeded my daily sunset jog along the beach at Barra de Navidad.

It was the holiday season, the beginning of January when the whole of Mexico takes two weeks off. They all go to the beach to eat mariscos (seafood) and as Barra de Navidad, a small fishing village, has several wonderful beachfront restaurants and is directly west of Guadalajara, it becomes inundated with tourists. Mostly Mexican. Mostly hungry. Most have a bottle. And they love company.

The last kilometer of my jog I would usually find myself zigzagging, bloated, dodging further temptation for fear of being beached like the giant turtles that occasionally wash onto the shore.

For the holidays Barra was festive with fireworks, a makeshift, rundown carnival, the nightly dances in the town square, bullfights, roving brass bands and parades, and the big priest brought in to preach and sing.

It was a big contrast from the rest of the year when you go for weeks without seeing a new face, or anything particularly exciting or different one day to the next.

Ah, but this was a fine piece of Mexico, that grand, glorious, wondrous, cheap, enchanting decadent paradise. I found Barra de Navidad the only way to find anything in Mexico.

I went south on the train until it broke down, took a bus from there until I couldn't stand the fumes anymore and I was certain one more kilometer and the driver would surely land us in the Pacific. (He drove with one hand, drank beer with the other and how he saw through the hanging plastic garlands and weeping Jesuses plastered on the windshield is a mystery.) Then I stuck my thumb out for a while and got dropped off in paradise.

Barra de Navidad: It had it all—cobble streets, clean beaches, perfect sunny days, warm, clear water with beautiful schools of fish. I rented a palapa (palm thatched hut) on the beach for $100 a month, complete with shower, toilet, sink and cooking facilities.

This sort of structure is not as tenuous as it sounds. Three weeks after moving in a cyclone tore through the town, taking with it a good portion of the beach, knocking over trees and power lines, but not a drop of water came into the palapa.

For years they tried to turn Barra into a tourist town, sort of an alternate Puerto Vallarta (three to four hours north by car) but for various reasons it failed, and just as well.

There are conveniences, such as the telegraph office in case you run out of money, the four or five tiendas when you need provisions, the four or five presentable hotels, the buses that run often to the big cities and little-known points.

But it is the inconveniences, like the post office that moves from house to house seasonally, the one telephone for the whole town, the lack of hot water (largely unnecessary—this is the tropics.), laundrettes, TVs, English-speaking people and their Yankee ways, that make it Mexico, not a staid, American south-of-the-border reproduction.

Waiting for a Better Mood

When I first came to Barra the post office was in the only tienda (small grocery store) that didn't close for siesta every afternoon, but the old, cantankerous woman who ran it wasn't very obliging.

If she didn't feel like bothering with the mail, well, then you'd have to wait a day or two until she was in a better mood.

Everyone complained, and the post office was moved to the other end of town, or so they told me. One day I was expecting an important letter and went desperately searching for it. After 45 minutes or so I came across a small blue correo sign in front of a house hidden by vines and trees.

I walked onto a porch, clumps of bananas hanging from its roof beams. Two parrots walked across them. "Buena noches," one of the parrots said. "Buenos dias," the other said.

Friendly birds, but like the people, they had little conception of time.

The postwoman sat at a desk stacked high with letters and fanned herself with a manila envelope. The postman, who couldn't have been older than 8 or 9, was getting ready to go on his rounds.

"Where is this street, Mamma?" he asked, pointing to an address.

She shrugged and studied a map while he stuffed a paper shopping bag full of letters.

"Look at this one. From Dinamarca," he said incredulously.

What They Did at Summer Camp

By MARK ROSE

Camp by Alan Saperstein (Ticknor &amp; Fields; $12.95)

The brochure Geoff Thomason develops for Camp Freedom shows an idyllic retreat where carefree tykes can frolic naked in a stream, healthy and sound.

The truth would reveal "Jeffie's having to be carried into the water, Stoney's sawing open a bird's neck, Homer's throwing up at every meal." Truth as we know it, counts for little camp.

Geoff Thomason has many problems; chewing his thumb off didn't solve them. So he starts a camp with a maniacal chiropractor, Dr. Stone, where they can mold little boys to be free of adult-induced neurosis.

The camp is not only a deception but a horror, a place where "33 boys come to a dark place in their lives."

Consider poor little Jeffie, the mama's boy. Tired of his pissy son's whimpering, Jeffie's father throws him in the backyard where Jeffie sleeps with the family dog.

"This is just the beginning," Jeffie's father swears to himself.

Indeed it is. At Camp Freedom, the dictatorial Stone, intent on curing weaknesses of body and mind that do not necessarily exist, dunks the quivering Jeffie in a stream as bait for bloodsucking dragon leeches.

When another camper has an epileptic fit, Stone "cures him" by applying pressure to his spine (at Camp Freedom "spine" is everything) although it does no good. When Homer dangles precariously on a footbridge, he is ignored or implored to "jump, jump."

Stone, a man who has conquered his own fear and sickness, is determined to teach the boys to control theirs. His daily tirades and bone-crunching chiropractic "adjustments" succeed in quelling dissent.

Most of these tales are told through the somewhat widened eyes of Gus, a bum who used to roam the woods cracking squirrels on the head. He fits in perfectly as head cook of the camp. Gus has come to his own dark place.

But then Stone kills and a mutiny begins. No one is allowed in; no one is allowed out, orders Stone. But Gus goes back into the woods leaving behind a piece of wisdom: "All stories are scary."

At the climax of this week of terror, all things fall apart and in some respects so does the book.

Heaviness takes hold and an unnecessary topical conclusion buries purpose. The cataclysm is out of sync, even with the wild scenes that precede it.

But the trail is worth the disappointing destination. Camp Freedom is at the core an adult attitude: perverse, eccentric and we-know-best.

The Sailing Book, edited by Michael Bartlett and Joanne A. Fishman (Arbor House; $22.95), is a collection of 43 short pieces celebrating the joys and trials of sailing, from the seemingly insane undertaking of solo circumnavigation to racing for self-fulfillment and high stakes. Excerpts from Melville, Joshua Slocum and Thor Heyerdahl introduce the mystery, power and appeal of the oceans. Rachel Carson's essay on the birth and development of the "all-providing, all-embracing mother sea" will entice and educate. Chapters on the art of sailing and the great races should delight. Some pieces stand alone as fine slices of entertainment. In "Sailing on the Roof of the World," a surreal tale, Tristan Jones finds himself alone and confused on then-uncharted Lake Titicaca, in a "world of superstition and fear, black magic and wonder."

a biography of Lissack. The book was never completed, according to both men. Lissack is the author of several books and says the Florida media describes him as a Wall Street whistle-blower and local political activist. He recently ran for county commissioner in Florida as a Republican and lost by a decisive margin, he said.

A former managing director at Smith Barney, Lissack confirmed that he spent one night in jail following charges that he harassed the investment banking firm with prank e-mails after he was fired in 1998. "I was a crook—a reformed crook, but a crook," Lissack admitted.

Also in 1998, the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) issued a cease-and-desist order finding that Lissack "willfully violated Section 10(b) of the Exchange Act and Rule 10b-5 thereunder" in connection with a bond refinancing he managed for Smith Barney for Dade County, Fla., in 1993. According to the order, he was fined $30,000 and "barred from association with any broker, dealer, municipal securities dealer, investment advisor or investment company" for five years.

The SEC investigation cost Smith Barney more than $2 million in fines and restitution, according to a press release from that agency.

Commissioner
District 3

Asked why he has taken the initiative to make disparaging allegations regarding Rose, Lissack said it would be a "scandalous sin to allow the poor people of Jefferson County" to have someone like Rose elected to office.

Documentation

Although Lissack has made several allegations about Rose, he has provided no documentation to back them up.

Rose has provided a copy of the complaint filed against him by InstantKnowledge.com in October 2000, and his counter-complaint. Both parties alleged fraud by the other, but the bulk of the issues pertains to an agreement by which Rose was to leave the company and receive a payment in return for stock he owned in the company.

According to the copy of the settlement agreement provided by Rose, he was awarded $190,000 and agreed to give up all interest in the company. The agreement does not substantiate any allegations of fraud or other improprieties.

Mark Rose

Subsequently, Kirie Pedersen filed a suit against Instant Knowledge, according to Lissack. Rose hired Pedersen, a longtime Jefferson County resident, when he was CEO and later married her, he said. Rose declined to discuss that matter at all and declined to provide a copy of that settlement. According to Lissack, Pedersen also won a cash settlement from the company. Rose and Pedersen live on property at Pulali Point, north of Birmion.

Company performance

Lissack maintains that InstantKnowledge.com would have been a success if not for Rose's management. He claims that a company with a competing product, Spark Notes, was sold to Barnes & Noble for $13 million. The assets of InstantKnowledge.com, he said,

"I was a crook—a reformed crook, but a crook."

Michael Lissack
former friend and business partner of Mark Rose

"It is disingenuous to paint either Mr. Rose or Mr. Lissack as the single culprit of this company's demise," Fein said yesterday, adding, "I do not believe Mr. Rose is either exclusively innocent or guilty for InstantKnowledge's failure. I don't believe that the characteristics I witnessed [in Mark Rose] as an employee at InstantKnowledge.com are the type of skills a successful candidate would possess." Fein said of Rose's candidacy, "In my opinion, leaders... have a responsibility to avoid emotionalism, personal vindictiveness and reprisals that would destroy an employee's confidence." Fein noted that he is a Republican and that he made those observations irrespective of any political differences.

Rose declined to comment about Fein.

Rose's career

The controversy ignited by

Rose said he then spent about 15 years in public relations, working at Robert Marston & Associates, Howard Rubenstein Associates, Alan Towers Associates and Lipper/Helishom Associates. He held the title of senior vice president for Edelman Worldwide, a company for whom he worked in New York and Los Angeles. The Leader has not attempted to independently verify that information.

Rose provided the Leader a clip file of about two years of writing during the 1980s and 1990s. Rose was a freelance contributor for the New York Times and an editorial staff employee at the Los Angeles Times. In addition, he wrote a column for the New York Press, a free weekly publication.

Democratic Party

As Lissack's allegations came to light last week in widely circulated e-mails to local Republicans and others, the Jefferson County Democratic Party's executive board endorsed Rose over fellow Democratic candidate Bob "Con-gar" Garten of Shine.

Sue Maret, local party treasurer and Rose's campaign manager, alleged that Garten hasn't read the Democratic Party platform and has "never" come to a Democratic Party meeting. As to whether her party might want to affirm that endorsement in light of Lissack's allegations, Maret said, "Our position is that Mark is an unfortunate thing from the past that's come forward."

Asked about Lissack's allegations raising doubts about his integrity or leadership ability, Rose said, "I have been forthcoming about everything. Michael Lissack has alleged, and it's false," adding, "I really have nothing to hide here."

Rose said it was a "shock" and a "surprise" to learn of Lissack's allegations. He also said that he became aware of Lissack's unsuccessful political bid several months ago, and that "Mr. Lissack has a history of harassing those with whom he has had past business relationships."

Other candidates

At last week's county commissioner candidate forum in Quilicura, one of the questions was whether a candidate had ever declared bankruptcy or been fired. Rose and Republican Pat Rodgers both said they had not been fired or declared bankruptcy.

Garten did not directly answer that question at the forum, but in a follow-up interview Monday night, Garten said the answer to both questions was "no." Asked about a foreclosure of some property he owned in the Shine area in 2000, Garten confirmed that there was a foreclosure proceeding at that time but he was able to cure the problem and retains title to that property today.

Letter: Who is Mark Rose?

Editor, Leader:

Who is Mark Rose? Not who does he say he is, but who is he? Voters ought to be suspicious of anyone who moves into an area, immediately becomes engrossed in local issues and runs for a high-paying office.

It is really up to the media to dig into resumes and verify as many candidate claims as possible. Remember, candidates can lie and misrepresent their past with zero consequences if the media allows that to happen. Mark Rose implies a highly successful past with a wealth of experience. Yet Rose's financial disclosure shows he owes back taxes to the State of California and a debt to his father-in-law. Is this a "red flag" to anyone besides me?

His F-1 shows an interest in property on Pulali Point Road, but what is his ownership? Personally, I think candidates ought to submit to a credit check. If they can't handle their own finances responsibly, why should we elect them to manage our tax dollars? Also, don't kid yourselves, mover-shaker candidates experiencing financial difficulties are often the easiest to corrupt.

I expect a responsible media to look closely at all candidates for major, high-paying offices. I know what I'm talking about. You see I spent more than 40 years in the media business and was the executive editor of the Las Vegas Sun.

So Mr. Rose was a journalist for the L.A. Times and the New York Times? Let's see some of his "work" and verify his employment.

Tragically, this scrutiny was not done during the last county commissioner race. Thus we ended up with an under-qualified candidate who went to meetings for less than four months and then quit. Now we are faced with another costly election. Are we about to make the same mistake again? Who is Mark Rose?

(Editor's note: Mr. Rose's business experience in California was detailed in the Aug. 27 Leader. Mr. Rose has stated that in terms of the debt, his wife Kirie, is repaying a loan from her father that predates her marriage to Rose. In terms of his experience as a journalist, we have confirmed that Mr. Rose was on the staff of the Los Angeles Times and was a free-lance writer for the New York Times. He was on the staff of at least one other media outlet in New York City.

Mark Rose answers allegations in letters

Concerning letters in Thursday's PDN questioning my background and the history of my in-laws:

■ I would be glad to show my portfolio of journalism for The New York Times, Los Angeles Times, Village Voice and New York Press to any legitimate source.

■ I have no debt to my father-in-law. Automatic tax payments are sent to California concerning a business dissolution.

■ I would be glad to discuss the strategic plans I have created and implemented for large corporations and start-up businesses over the past 20 years.

This experience has given me the skills to manage budgets, personnel and long-range plans.

My current business, CommTech, Inc., helps public and private entities communicate with employees and the public.

■ As for my family history:

My father-in-law, John Pedersen, first came to Jefferson County in 1929 to attend Camp Parsons. He returned after World War II.

Three of John and Marilyn Pedersen's six children, including my wife, were born here.

John was instrumental in planning construction of the Brinnon School. He served on the Brinnon school board

Mr. Bryn Armstrong
Port Townsend, Washington

Dear Mr. Armstrong:

You have asked me if a Mark Rose was at any time a journalist on the editorial staff of the Los Angeles Times. You forwarded for my examination a list of articles from the Times that Mr. Rose has offered as evidence to support that claim. The articles are from the early 1980s. In addition, you forwarded various printed material, including a campaign pamphlet and newspaper clippings, in which Mr. Rose asserts that he was a journalist at the Times or is described as such.

I was an editor for 18 years at the Times, from assistant metropolitan editor in 1974 to deputy managing editor in 1983 and senior editor in 1990. I retired in 1992. During the time period indicated by the Mark Rose list of articles, I was metropolitan editor. As such, I supervised the metropolitan staff, four state bureaus, several suburban sections within Los Angeles County and daily editions in San Diego and Orange County.

I have no recollection of anyone named Mark Rose on the editorial staff of the Los Angeles Times during my tenure as an editor, nor do several other editors with whom I have consulted. A search by the Times library thus far has turned up no articles that indicate he was a member of the editorial staff.

that are typically done by free-lance contributors, and by the article. You will note that most if not all are items written for the Book Review, Travel and View sections, which rely heavily on free-lance contributors.

Free-lance contributors are not employees of the Times. They are not entitled to claim that they are "journalists with" the Times, nor are they entitled to claim that they are "on the staff of the Los Angeles Times" or "a member of the editorial staff." Only full-time regularly employed writers and editors may claim that status.

The only claim that free-lance contributors can make is that they are free-lance contributors, or "stringers" in the journalistic vernacular.

A search of employee personnel records has not yet been completed. If Mr. Rose was employed in a lesser position, say as a copy messenger or clerk in an editorial office, that would entitle him to claim that he was an editorial department employee. But it would not entitle him to claim that he was a journalist at the Times or a member of the editorial staff. The distinction is quite important.

Republicans step up questioning of Rose

By Barney Burke and
Patrick J. Sullivan
Leader Staff Writers

The Jefferson County Republican Party is amplifying charges made by some critics of Democratic county commissioner candidate Mark Rose.

In a paid advertisement on local cable TV that began running last week, the local Republican Party Central Committee, chaired by Ron Gregory, charges that Rose has lied about his employment history, his education and his financial success.

Rose's opponent, Republican Pat Rodgers, said of the ad this week, "I don't condone it and I don't knock it." He said he did not screen the ad idea, which was the central committee's creation.

Gregory said yesterday, "I have not had one phone call either supporting or condemn-

Glen Cove talk
Candidates offer ideas;
see page C 3

ing" the ad. Asked if it was accurate, Gregory replied, "Absolutely."

Rodgers said that the ad doesn't tell half of what it should, adding, "As I understand it, there's nothing in the ad that isn't accurate."

Rose said, "I'm flattered that they would go to the trouble" to make the ad, which depicts Rose with a nose growing ala Pinocchio. He said he asked the GOP to pull the ad, but they refused.

Three key charges in the ad are that Rose lied about working for the L.A. Times newspaper, lied about his college education, and that he isn't a successful business person.

Rose denies all three charges.

which have also been raised in other newspaper or brochure campaign ads and raised at question-and-answer candidate forums.

L.A. Times records

The Republican TV ad stated that Rose was not an L.A. Times employee and that he only wrote a "letter to the editor."

According to an official with the L.A. Times Personnel Department, Mark Rose was an employee of that company from April 26, 1982 to Dec. 6, 1982.

The company's personnel files go back only seven years, so no further details of Rose's employment were available. But the spokesperson confirmed that Rose indeed is listed as a former employee.

"I can confirm the 1982 date," the spokesperson said Monday afternoon.

In August, Rose had submitted for Leader review a file of newspaper clips, some original and some photocopies, that included about six pieces from the L.A. Times. This included an obituary, a travel piece and a book review published in 1982. Two of those items included an ending tagline reference that Rose was a Times "editorial" employee. It also appears the L.A. Times published a travel piece by Rose on Oct. 24, 1982, regarding his experiences living in New York City.

In a piece of campaign literature, Rose describes himself as having been a "journalist with the New York Times and L.A. Times." Republicans have questioned whether Rose can call himself a journalist. His New York Times experience was that of a freelance writer, the New York Times clips Rose provided to the Leader were opinion or first-person accounts. He also had other articles published as a freelancer in other New York newspapers in 1983 and 1991, according to clips he provided to the Leader.

In interviews with the Leader, Rose never claimed to have been an employee of the New York Times.

Education

In a voter guide published in the Aug. 31 edition of the Peninsula Daily News, Rose lists his formal education as "New York University, new media and public relations." As has been previously reported by the Leader, Rose holds only a high school diploma.

Rose said this week that he did not try to misrepresent his education to the Daily News. In that same publication, fellow primary candidates Bob "Cougar" Garten listed his education as "Grade 12" and Rodgers answered "BBA, MBA, Pacific Lutheran University."

Business success?

The Republican ad questions Rose's success as a business person, noting that he owes back income taxes in California. Rose made a public disclosure of that tax debt, more than $3,000, as required in financial disclosures he filed with the Washington Public Disclosure Commission in August. Rose has listed no financial assets other than his home. Rose answered questions about his finances in the Aug. 20 edition of the Leader.

"I believe I have a successful business career," Rose said yesterday, contending that those skills would serve him well as an elected official. The Leader's Aug. 27 edition documented Rose's involvement with a failed

One-fifth of absentee ballots returned so far

With the addition of nearly 900 ballots received Tuesday, the Jefferson County Auditor's Office has received 18 percent of the absentee and vote-by-mail ballots issued.

Elections Coordinator Karen Cartmel said the auditor's office mailed 11,477 ballots for the Nov. 4 general election. The office tallied 889 more ballots Tuesday, eight of which were unsigned, so those voters will receive letters telling them their vote can't be counted without a signature.

Cartmel said 2,044 ballots had been returned as of Tuesday morning. The percentage of ballots was slightly higher than the percentage that had been returned at the same time last year.

Sent: Tuesday, January 06, 2004 9:48 AM
To: Sally Parker
Subject: PDC case 04-288

My name is Rick Sullivan; I am the co-partner of eurocycle.com, the website you referred to in your letter dated December 5. The only other partner in this small business is my wife, Sandra. We have used the eurocycle.com web site since 1996 to promote the sale of a series of travel videos about bicycling in Europe. The site was last updated since 2001; when amazon.com began distributing our video products. I generally pick up our mail twice monthly at the Post Office Box you mailed the letter to, so I apologize for not replying sooner.

My profession is freelance media designer and producer. I have been producing award-winning media in Seattle since 1967. Eurocycle.com LLC is a company that Sandy and I set up to do retail and wholesale media production and distribution. For the present time, we are distributing bicycling videos on VHS videotape through Amazon.com. And the internet part of the business is simply a web address and the catalog that you probably saw.

As a part of the review process for my media products, I like to keep my clients up-to-date with the progress, and I have found the internet to be a valuable tool. E-mailing works great for scripts, but video media files are huge and tie up e-mail servers. The solution is uploading the file to a server and letting the customers view it at their leisure. All production companies have websites to allow them to do this. One recent example is an animation that I produced for the DIS, a part of the "Ask George" media campaign which was done entirely over the internet. All media files were uploaded and downloaded from our respective servers; reviews and deadlines were met; customers were happy. All without commuting to Olympia on I-5 during January!

For reviewing, I create a "thumbnail" copy and upload it to a private directory, "demo" in the eurocycle.com domain. This directory is not available through the web site, eurocycle.com. The only persons who can access this are those who receive a link to the directory by way of a personal e-mail from me. There is no link on the eurocycle web site that gives the public access to this directory; consequently, it is not possible to locate these files by surfing, as you discovered. I assume that you received the link from Ron Gregory or a member of his committee. These links are usually deleted within thirty days of the posting, sometimes sooner, as I only have about 70 megs of storage on my server.

The political spot "Pinocchio" is a job that I contracted with Ron Gregory of the Jefferson County Republican Central Committee. The content was solely the responsibility of the Committee. When I completed editing the spot, I uploaded it to the "demo" directory and e-mailed a link to Ron. He is the only person who received this link and I am assuming that he forwarded it to his committee for review. Upon Ron's approval by phone, I made a broadcast dub of the spot and sent it to the Comcast Cable. I also mailed him some VHS copies, which are of a more suitable viewing quality than the thumbnail. I am assuming that you received your link from the committee or Ron himself.

Neither eurocycle.com nor myself or my wife are in any way financially affiliated with the Jefferson County Republican Central Committee or anyone on that committee, or any other political committee. I was paid a fair price for my services by my customer, the Committee, and they were pleased with the product.
